EDUCATIONAL JUSTICE, MAYOR DE BLASIO?
CHARTER SCHOOLS FIXED THAT FOR YOU

OPINION

Educational justice, Mayor de Blasio? Charter schools fixed that for you

By Robert Pondiscio

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio wants to make admission to Stuyvesant, Bronx Science, and the city's other selective high schools more racially equitable. It's a laudable impulse, but it's also anachronistic and unnecessary. The primary rationale for widening the on-ramp to these schools is to increase the number of low-income African American and Hispanic students on track to attend selective colleges and universities. But this important work is already being done by the city's charter schools—and in numbers that dwarf the capacity of Stuyvesant and Bronx Science, even under the rosier scenarios proposed by the Mayor. Read more.

Ending poverty as we've known (and measured) it?

By Chester E. Finn, Jr.

A big surprise—and mountain of confusion—is coming to everyone who cares about educating poor kids, not to mention every policy wonk in the K–12 realm. The definition of “poor” and “disadvantaged” is changing for the first time in decades, and the outcome is going to be a prolonged period of instability and inconsistency. The primary gauge of poverty in the education system has long been how many students qualify for subsidized meals via the federally-funded National School Lunch Program, a measure that seriously exaggerates poverty’s extent—and distorts its locations—among students. But this is all in flux now. Read more.

Here’s how Catholic schools instill self-discipline

By Dr. Thomas Burnford

To anyone who has worked in, attended, or sent their children to a Catholic school, the findings of Fordham’s recent study Self-Discipline and Catholic Schools are no surprise. These institutions are dedicated to educating the whole child—mind, body, and spirit—with a focus on the development of intellect, personhood, and relationships. Those priorities are evident in the study’s major findings: Catholic school students exhibit more self-control and self-discipline and are less likely to act out or be disruptive than students in other private or public schools. There are several reasons why Catholic schools are able to accomplish this laudable feat. Read more.

The child poverty rate plummeted after welfare reform. Here’s what that means for education.

By Michael J. Petrilli

When measured correctly, the U.S. child poverty rate declined from 13.1 percent in 1996 to 7.8 percent in 2014—a drop of almost two-fifths. This has huge implications for many policy areas, including education reform. For the teachers’ unions and other traditional education groups, it raises hard questions that are still relevant today about their familiar contention that America’s lackluster student achievement is due to poverty—that we must “fix poverty first” before our schools will improve. Considering that these socioeconomic trends should put the wind at our backs, it also ought to make reformers wonder why we haven't seen greater progress in student outcomes over the past twenty years. Read more.

The effects of D.C.'s voucher program

By David Griffith

A recent federally-funded evaluation examined the impacts of the D.C. Opportunity Scholarship Program after two years. Overall, its authors estimate that participating in the program reduced students' achievement by about 10 percentile points in math and about 3.8 percentile points in English language arts, though the latter estimate isn't statistically significant. Nor did the program have a significant effect on parental involvement or satisfaction. On a brighter note, however, it did positively impact parents' and students' perceptions of school safety. ### How much one cohort of students is learning, according to NAEP

By Emily Howell

What the National Assessment of Educational Progress reveals about student achievement across the fifty states is more complex than simple score comparisons. In a recent report from the Brookings Institution, Matthew Chingos follows NAEP cohorts from fourth to eighth grade, finding that students in some states make gains at both levels, while others regress by eighth grade or, conversely, catch up despite a slow start. Read more.

REPORT:

Self-Discipline and Catholic Schools: Evidence from Two National Cohorts

Regardless of where you stand on the debate currently raging over school discipline, one thing seems certain: Self-discipline is far better than the externally imposed kind. Over the years, Catholic schools have been particularly committed to the formation of sound character, including the acquisition of self-discipline. But how well has that worked? Do students in Catholic school actually exhibit more self-discipline than their peers—and if so, what can those schools teach other public and private schools about how it can be fostered? Our new report examines these questions and finds that students in Catholic schools exhibit more self-control and self-discipline and are less likely to act out or be disruptive than peers in other private or public schools. This suggests that schools that value and focus on self-discipline will likely do a better job of fostering it in children; that other schools have something to learn from Catholic schools when it comes to fostering self-discipline; and that we should not underestimate the power of religion to positively influence a child's behavior—and thus shouldn't restrict families' choices on the basis of religion. ## New Skills for Youth highlights CTE progress around the nation

By Jessica Poiner

Two years ago, JPMorgan Chase & Co. launched a $75-million five-year initiative called New Skills for Youth. The goal was to expand access to high-quality career and technical education programs that can lead students to postsecondary degrees, credentials, and well-paying jobs. The first year of phase two is now complete, and a recently released 2017 snapshot outlines the "notable progress" that selected states made in designing, enhancing, and scaling high-quality career pathways. Here's a look at how a few of these states addressed four of the most crucial aspects of high-quality CTE. Read more.

Catholic schools' competitive advantage: Self-discipline in the school-choice era

By J. Jacob Kirksey

The core of the Catholic school "brand" is a dual focus on "human development" and academic success, says the coauthor of Fordham's recent report Self-Discipline and Catholic Schools? 4a strikingly sane approach that serves as an implicit rebuke to educational researchers' and policymakers' tendency to fixate on test scores, and coincides with students in these institutions demonstrating better self-control than their peers at other schools. But these findings raise other questions, such as: What accounts for the Catholic school advantage? And answers will require a qualitative approach—one that focuses on observing actual classrooms and talking to teachers and parents about how their kids are doing. Read more.

How Ohio should distribute its school improvement funds

By Jessica Poiner

When Ohio state report cards are released this fall, it will be the first time that summative letter grades are assigned to districts and schools. It will also be the first time that these summative ratings are used to identify the state's lowest performing 5 percent of schools, a requirement of ESSA. Seven percent of the state's Title I dollars will be set aside for efforts to turnaround those schools. And one promising solution is a shuttered and short-lived competitive grant program called the Straight A Fund. Despite its brief life, the program showcased some promising ideas and results, and ESSA presents a chance for Ohio to revive it and capitalize on its strengths and improve its weaknesses. ### STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION APPROVES STRATEGIC PLAN – At its June meeting, the State Board of Education approved its strategic plan, EachChild=OurFuture, laying out a framework for the state's educational goals, strategies and guiding principles. The plan's vision is that EachChild graduates from high school, and each graduate is prepared with the knowledge, skills and disposition to pursue his or her chosen post-high school path and become a lifelong learner who is an engaged, culturally aware and contributing member of society. The overarching goal is to annually increase the percentage of Ohio's high school graduates who, within one year of graduation, are: 1) Enrolled and succeeding in a post-high school learning experience, including an adult career-technical education program, an apprenticeship and/or a two-year or four-year college program (15 semester hours); or 2) Serving in a military branch; or 3) Earning a living wage.

Postsecondary & Workforce Development

Report Urges Adoption of 'Demand Driven Education' – Education DIVE

- The Demand Driven Education report says higher education has had stages of reform that first focused on access for all types of students and then their success. Now, the report says, it should turn attention to better preparing students for jobs available now and that will develop in the future

Curriculum

A Bold Effort to End Algebra Tracking Shows Promise – EdWeek

- Part of an ambitious project to end the relentless assignment of underserved students into lower-level math, the city now requires all students to take math courses of equal rigor through geometry, in classrooms that are no longer segregated by ability. That means no "honors" classes. No gifted track. No weighted GPAs until later in high school. No 8th grade Algebra 1

Data

How (and Why) Ed-Tech Companies Are Tracking Students' Feelings – EdWeek

- It's just one example of a growing push to use educational technology to measure, monitor, and modify students' emotions, mindsets, and ways of thinking. The trend is provoking strong and conflicting reactions throughout the K-12 world

District Leaders Seek Interoperability to Access Data Educators Need – EdWeek

- With many districts running up to 100 ed-tech applications—most operating within a closed ecosystem of their own data—that kind of access to cross-reference pieces of information about students is often impossible for schools

Leadership

The Pre-K-8 School Leader in 2018: A 10-Year Study – NAESP/UCEA

- The Pre-K-8 School Leader in 2018: A 10-Year Study is the ninth in this series of research studies, and it imparts new information about the current education climate; the challenges veteran, early career, and assistant principals face; the students they serve; and the conditions under which they work

School Leadership: A Primer for Policymakers – ECS

- Because principals are key to teacher and student success, it is important for states to develop policies that support them throughout their careers — from preparation to evaluation and ongoing support. By first adopting strong school leadership standards and further aligning policies with these standards, states can help ensure effective principals lead more schools — and the teachers and students within those schools

The victims of unearned diplomas

By Adam Tyner and Brandon L. Wright

Upwards of 3.6 million high school seniors graduated this year, and most of them left twelfth grade with a reasonable complement of the knowledge and skills we expect of those taking their first steps into adulthood—be that college, career or technical training, military service, even a fruitful “gap year.” Most—but not all. Recent scandals in Washington, D.C., Maryland, and elsewhere have made it clear that far too many students are still being shuttled through secondary school with little regard for whether they leave with the requisite skills. Many believe this is a victimless act: “These struggling students will be even worse off without diplomas!” some might declare. But step back a moment and you will see the harm. Read more.

Dubious move to reject Advanced Placement

By Chester E. Finn, Jr.

An octet of Washington, D.C.-area private schools recently announced that they'll no longer offer Advanced Placement courses, and made much of how the home-grown classes that will replace AP "allow for authentic engagement with the world and demonstrate respect for students' intellectual curiosity and interests." That's apt to resonate with upper-middle class parents whose children attend these schools and are likely to do fine in college and beyond, with or without AP. For the vast majority of American families, however, desperate for quality schooling and solid college prospects for their own children, this whole maneuver looks snobby and smug. It's also off-base and disingenuous. Read more.

States' newfound freedom to fix or replace struggling schools: Advice for state boards

By Brandon L. Wright

States have long struggled to turn around low-performing schools, but they now have the freedom under ESSA to bring creativity to the task. The law grants them significant deference, and $1.1 billion in the current fiscal year, to achieve this goal. And state boards are among the entities best poised to effect this change. ESSA frontloads responsibility on local officials, so the challenge for state leaders is to achieve the right sequence of carrot and stick. They must persuade, cajole, and challenge districts into taking effective action to improve student outcomes, but they also need local leaders to know they will use the "rigorous interventions" the law demands if failures persist. To fix the gaming of graduation requirements, we need to overhaul high schools and our policies governing them

By Michael J. Petrilli

We armchair-quarterbacks of education have made a complete hash of the policies governing high schools and what's expected of young people seeking to graduate from them. Our first mistake was to set sky-high goals around graduation rates, while allowing local officials great discretion in defining what it takes for students to earn a diploma. Our second big error has been to resist anything resembling tracking. Until we fix these problems, we should expect the cheating and gaming to continue. Read more.

STUDY

Bringing Head Start programing into the home

By Jeff Murray

If a little treatment goes a long way, does it stand to reason that more treatment will go even further? A research team led by Karen Bierman of Penn State University recently tested this idea. The treatment in question is the Research-Based and Developmentally Informed preschool classroom program, which researchers extended via a home-visiting program designed to train parents as surrogate teachers. They found that, consistent with their previous studies, students who received the latter treatment at home scored significantly better on all measures at the end of kindergarten than did students receiving only the classroom program and a packet of math-learning games in the mail. ### The diversity of Denver's school portfolio

By Tyler Hughes

A recent A+ Colorado report examined whether Denver's portfolio-style district—which comprises numerous autonomous public schools employing different educational strategies and philosophies—offers an equal variety of options for students in all areas of the city and in all grades, as well as whether its various school models correlate with higher or lower test scores. It finds, among other things, that each region offers a unique set of options for students, but some regions have more diverse offerings than others, and no one region has seats in every school model. Nor is any one model consistently high quality. Read more.

REPORT:

Self-Discipline and Catholic Schools: Evidence from Two National Cohorts

Regardless of where you stand in the debate currently raging over school discipline, one thing seems certain: It is better for kids to show self-discipline than to have it externally imposed. Over the years, Catholic schools have been particularly committed to the formation of sound character, including the development of self-discipline. But how well has that worked? Do students in Catholic school actually exhibit more self-discipline than their peers—and if so, what can those schools teach other public and private schools about how it can be fostered? This report examines these questions and finds that students in Catholic schools do indeed exhibit more self-control and self-discipline and are less likely to act out or be disruptive than peers in other private or public schools. This suggests that schools that value and focus on self-discipline will likely do a better job of fostering it in children; that other schools have something to learn from Catholic schools when it comes to fostering self-discipline; and that we should not underestimate the power of religion to positively influence a child's behavior—and thus shouldn't restrict families' choices on the basis of religion. ## What have we learned from the Gates-funded teacher evaluation reforms?

By Matthew A. Kraft

Nine years, $575 million dollars, and 500-plus pages later, what have we learned about the Gates Foundation's ambitious efforts to improve teacher effectiveness through evaluation and human capital reforms? The headlines about the RAND Corporation's recently released final report on the The Intensive Partnerships for Effective Teaching initiative have focused on the lack of any consistent effects on student outcomes. But the real story here is the many insights about implementation—what actually happened on the ground—based on rich qualitative and survey data. Read more.

Crowdsourcing request: Best educational YouTube channels for kids?

By Michael J. Petrilli

Fordham has published a list of TV shows for young kids and for families, a compilation of educational videos, and a list of recommended apps. Now for the next frontier: YouTube. It feels like a miracle that there's such good content being produced, and makes us wonder what else we should be sampling. To that end, we took a spin around the yonders of YouTube and found numerous worthwhile offerings for various age groups and academic subjects. But we also want our list to be as complete as possible, so check it out and let us know what we missed. Read more.

No, they aren't amazing because they finished fifth grade

By Erika Sanzi

Is a fifth grade graduation really all that amazing? Are we really high-fiving and showering our kids with gifts because they finished eighth grade? There was a time when graduations were only for twelfth graders. Yes, there are circumstances in which these milestones and achievements can be remarkable: war-torn countries, violence-ridden communities, children who have overcome the odds of illness or trauma. But most of suburban America is caught up in a culture that over-praises the most basic achievements, as if finishing elementary school was even up for negotiation or "graduating" from eighth grade symbolizes some sort of triumph. Let's stop. Read more.

States cracking down on streaming video while driving

USA TODAY

Georgia isn't the only state to single out streaming as a new danger. A Washington state law, the Driving Under the Influence of Electronics Act, in January was the first to specifically mention video on phones. It even makes it illegal for Washington drivers to sneak a peek at their smartphone when stopped in traffic or at a stoplight, though they can touch a mounted or in-dash screen.

OHIO LEGISLATION UPDATE

House Bills

Senate Bills

FEATURED ITEMS

OHIO GENERAL ASSEMBLY PASSES MUCH LEGISLATION –

The Ohio General Assembly had a busy week passing much legislation including several bills impacting education policy. Senate Bill 216 (SB216) includes provisions impacting the Ohio Teacher Evaluation System, licensure rules, highly qualified teacher requirements, state assessments, College Credit Plus, the “N-size” for calculation of annual measurable objectives, five-year financial forecasts and more. House Bill 87 (HB87) also included education policy-related legislation such as the distribution of community school funds as a result of a finding for recovery from the Auditor of State, school district treasurer duties and more. These bills and many others are headed to Governor Kasich’s office for review, potential line item vetoes, and signature into law. (NOTE: Ohio education- and local government-related legislation updates are included at the end of each Wrap.)

School Deregulation Bill Becomes Vehicle for Online Charter Changes –

Hannah

- An education deregulation package that the Senate passed unanimously split the House Education Committee along party lines Tuesday after the addition of amendment on e-schools among other changes

Lawmakers Vote to Change Ohio’s Teacher Evaluation System, Tests – Dayton

Daily News

- The Ohio House on Wednesday approved a major school deregulation bill by a 60-33 vote, changing Ohio’s Teacher Evaluation System, allowing schools to go back to paper and pencil state tests for third-graders, and giving more flexibility on teacher licensure requirements, among dozens of changes

State Will Study Effect of School Takeovers, But Not Halt Them – Cleveland

Plain Dealer

U.S. SUPREME COURT MAKES JANUS RULING – The U.S.

Supreme Court released its ruling in the case of Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employee Counties 31. By a 5-4 vote, the court ruled that public sector unions are no longer permitted to require government workers who choose not to join the union to help pay for collective bargaining. The ruling overruled the court's 1977 decision in Abood v. Detroit Board of Education which had made a distinction between two kinds of compelled payments to prevent freeloading and ensure "labor peace."

Janus, the Supreme Court, and Teachers' Unions: An Overview – EdWeek

- The U.S. Supreme Court has delivered a major blow to teachers' unions, ruling in Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees Council 31 that teachers in about half of states do not have to pay "agency" or "shop" fees if they're not union members

Divided Supreme Court Ends Mandatory Dues and — in Further Blow to Unions — Rules Members Must Opt In – The 74

- The Supreme Court in a sweeping decision Wednesday upended the way public-sector unions do business, ruling that dissenting employees cannot be compelled to pay any dues, and that union members must affirmatively opt into membership — rather than requiring dissenters to opt out

Supreme Court Ruling Delivers a Sharp Blow to Labor Unions – New York Times

- The Supreme Court dealt a major blow on Wednesday to organized labor. By a 5-to-4 vote, with the more conservative justices in the majority, the court ruled that government workers who choose not to join unions may not be required to help pay for collective bargaining
